

A person with special needs in Christian Communities – Josef Slowik

This book, written by Josef Slowik, Ph.D., a special education teacher currently working as an assistant professor at University of West Bohemia in Plzen (Faculty of Education), provides an introductory overview sufficient for everyday contact with people with physical or social disadvantages. Most of all, the book should help the reader overcome unnecessary shyness, worries, as well as many prejudices regarding those with disabilities.

Rise and Walk – Jorge Uba

This book written by George Uba, retired pastor and founder of Rise and Walk Association on Romania, presents in detail the path that led the author to found this unique association. Rise and Walk gathers more than 4000 members, people with disabilities and volunteers, all over Romania, in 30 different locations.

A captivating story, an invitation to solidarity with those who live a different mobility experience.

The author's dream is that there may be other Rise and Walks in all the countries where the Seventh-day Adventist Church is present.

If it Hails in May – Rolando Rizzo

The books written by Rolando Rizzo, former Pastor and teacher, is a novel that already in its title contains the essential design of its contents.

Life in its beauty sometimes resembles a green expanse of fallow wheat that promises a rich summer harvest, but an hour's violent hailstorm is enough for it to become desperate desolation.

There are two fundamental types of handicap: one caused by narcissism and irresponsibility and the other that belongs to the chromosome lottery. Both often devastate happy families, or in any case force them to remodulate their whole existential path sometimes with heroic and, otherwise, desolating results.

In Rolando Rizzo's novel, both types of handicap plummet like lightning upon a family and its wealthy and strongly religious community, breaking down fronts, clichés, exalting appearances, to reveal the real substance we are made of and the basic choices everyone sooner or later has to deal with when "hail falls in May".
